All the important irrigated valleys report favorable crop conditions with a steady increase in land values. Extensive railroad building is now going on in Montana, Idaho, Washington and Oregon. In Oregon a virgin empire is soon to be made available for settlement by the construction of numerous lines penetrating a region which is largely public domain. It is estimated that an area of 12,000,000 acres in Oregon alone soon will be made available.

On the reclamation projects in all the states the influx of settlers is increasing, and the industry of those who have located is evidenced by the broad fields of alfalfa and grain, and in the hundreds of attractive and prosperous homes. At the present rate of settlement every farm unit included in the Government projects thus far completed will be taken up before the end of the year. On nine of these projects not a single acre of public land remains unentered and the remaining projects do not contain, all told, more than 800 farms now available for settlement.

"Yes, I'm the doctor," Hargreave answered, curtly. "What's your message?"

"Ah, so glad to find you! I've been wanting to talk with you for some time. Not busy this evening, are you?"

"Yery! You'd really oblige me by excusing me. With your permission I'll hang up the receiver and get back to make the construction of the several projects do not contain, all told, more than 800 farms now available for settlement.

CENSOR'S BLUNDER AMUSING RUSSIA

ST. PETERSBURG, June 20.-The press censor of Moscow hæs had all Russia laughing at his expense over a too hasty decision. A book on horse breeding, which recently appeared, was pounced upon by the fussy censor, branded as "an indecent publication," and the order issued that all copies were to be confiscated.

and the order issued that all copies were to be confiscated.

After that had been done, it was pointed out to the censor that the author of the obnoxious book was a womannone other than Princess Gorthchakoff, wife of the governor of Kalouga.

In a great fright, the censor realized that he had made a "bloomer," and hurriedly canceled the order for confiscation.

Together they went down the stone steps. The chauffeur stood on the sidewalk, holding the car door open for them. Two mnutes later they were in the limitualite, and the nowerful machine, with a purring of cogs, an easy tightening of clutches, had slid away from the ord, made a graceful curve, and was garbering speed down Fifty-second street toward Broadway.

For a while, neither spoke. The motor swung into its stride, guilded by the adept on the forward seat. Hargreave noted with siprise that the windows of the car were ground glass, through which nothing could be seen. A question rose to his loss, but he suppressed it. He had, in his long experience with folbles of millicnaires, seen many a greater oddity than this. He sank back into the luxury of the great leather cushions, and with that singular power of concentration whereof he was master, dismissed the present and plunged into the further construction of his monograph. Only when, from the sounds outside, it appeared that the auto had reacned a ferry and was running onto a beat, did Lawlor break his silence.
